hi,

I agree completely with there arguments

* Any remedy seeking to prevent an extension of Microsoft's monopoly must place Microsoft products as extra-cost options in the purchase of new computers, so that the user who does not wish to purchase them is not forced to do so. This means that for the price differential between a new computer with Microsoft software and one without, a computer seller must offer the software without the computer (which would prevent computer makers from saying that the difference in price is only a few dollars). Only then could competition come to exist in a meaningful way.

* The specifications of Microsoft's present and future document file formats must be made public, so that documents created in Microsoft applications may be read by programs from other makers, on Microsoft's or other operating systems. This is in addition to opening the Windows application program interface (API, the set of "hooks" that allow other parties to write applications for Windows operating systems), which is already part of the proposed settlement.

* Any Microsoft networking protocols must be published in full and approved by an independent network protocol body. This would prevent Microsoft from seizing de facto control of the Internet.

These arguments can be found on <http://www.linuxplanet.com/linuxplanet/opinions/3952/2/>

Also i like see Microsoft be more polite to open source community / free software foundation. Everyone have right to exist without rasism. GPL is about freedom (I think you americanz admire that:).

All the bugs should be let out to public as soon as possible. All the bug data and securitys holes should be informed. Microsoft should collect any information from it's customers without asking it directly with email (Ok button isn't enough).

Money giving schools is fine but schools should have right to choose what they want to use. these are the main things.
